

Introduction to the Montagu Corpus

CTS 2000: October 5, 2026

What is Digital History?

Digital history is the use of digital tools, methods, and resources to research, analyze, interpret, and present historical sources.

We make a difference between digital history and computational text analysis for literary studies.

Why practice Digital History ?

Digital methods are like any other approach within the discipline of history. Not every historian has to or wants to do digital history and not every archive or topic will be suitable for these approaches.

Ultimately, digital history allows historians to ask new questions and analyze primary sources at scale.

LETTER 1.
TO THE COUNTESS OF —.

✓ Rotterdam, Aug. 3. O. S. 1716.

I FLATTER, myself, dear sister, that I shall give you some pleasure in letting you know that I have safely passed the sea, though we had the ill fortune of a storm. We were persuaded by the captain of the yacht to set out in a calm, and he pretended there was nothing so easy as to tide it over; but, after two days slowly moving, the wind blew so hard, that none of the sailors could keep their feet, and we were all Sunday night tossed very handsomely. I never saw a man more frightened (sic) than the captain. For my part, I have been so lucky, neither to suffer from fear nor seasickness; though, I confess, I was so impatient to see myself once more upon dry land, that I would not stay till the yacht could get to Rotterdam, but went in the long-boat to Helvoetsluys, where we had voitures to carry us to the Briel. I was charmed with the neatness of that little town; but my arrival at Rotterdam presented me a new scene of pleasure. All the streets are paved with broad stones, and before many of the meanest artificers doors are placed seats of various coloured marbles, so neatly kept, that I assure you, I

For my part, I have been so lucky as to suffer from fear no sickness; though, I confess, I was so impatient to see myself once more upon land, that I MAKE haste to tell you, dear Madam, that, after all the dreadful fatigues you threatened me with, I am now very well pleased with my journey. We take care to make such short stages every day, that I rather fancy myself upon parties of pleasure, than upon the road; and sure nothing can be more agreeable than travelling in Holland. The whole country appears a large garden; the roads are well paved, shaded on each side with rows of trees, and bordered with large canals, full of boats, passing and repassing. I am sure you would be charmed with I AM extremely sorry, my dear S. that your fears of disobliging your relations, and their fears for your health and safety, have hindered me from enjoying the happiness of your company, and you the pleasure of a diverting journey. I receive some degree of mortification from every agreeable novelty, or pleasing prospect, by the reflection of your having so unluckily missed the delight which I know it would have given you. If you were with me in this town, you would be ready to expect to receive visits from your Nottingham friends. No two places were ever more resembling; one has but to give the Maese the name of the Trent, and there is no distinguishing the present. The houses, like those of Nottingham, are built one above another, and are intermixed in the same manner. IF my lady — could have any notion of the fatigues that I have suffered these two last days, I am sure she would own it a great proof of regard, that I now sit down to write to her. We hired horses from Nimeguen hither, not having the conveniency (sic) of the post, and found but very indifferent accommodations at Reinberg, our first stage; but it was nothing to what I suffered yesterday. We were in hopes to reach Cologne; our horses tired at Stamel, three hours from it, where I was forced to pass the night in my clothes, in a room not at all better than

6						AFTER five days travelling post, I could not sit down to write on any other occasion, than to tell my dear lady, that I have not forgot her obliging command, of sending her some account of my travels. I have already passed a large part of Germany, have seen all that is remarkable in Cologne, Frankfort, Wurtsburg, and this place. 'Tis impossible not to observe the difference between the free towns and those under the government of absolute princes, as all the little sovereigns of Germany are. In the first, there appears an air of commerce and plenty. The streets are well-built, and full of people, neatly and plainly dressed. The shops are loaded with

Rotterdam, Aug. 3. O. S. 1716²

I flatter myself (dear Sister) that I shall give you some pleasure in letting you know that I am safely passed the sea, though we had the ill fortune of a storm. We were persuaded by the captain of our yacht to set out in a calm, and he pretended that there was nothing so easy as to tide it over, but after two days slowly moving, the wind blew so hard that none of the sailors could keep their feet, and we were all Sunday night tossed very handsomely. For my part, I have been so lucky neither to suffer from fear or sea-sickness; though I confess I was so impatient to see myself once more upon dry land, that I would not stay till the yacht could get to Rotterdam, but went in the longboat to Helvoetsluys, where we hired voitures to carry us to the Brill. I was charmed with the neatness of this little town, but my arrival at Rotterdam presented me a new scene of pleasure. All the streets are paved with broad stones, and before the meanest artificers' doors, seats of various coloured marbles, and so neatly kept that I'll assure you I walked almost all over the town yesterday, incognito, in my slippers without receiving one spot of dirt; and you may see the Dutch maids washing the pavement of the street with more application than ours do our bed-chambers. The town seems so full of people with such busy faces, all in motion, that I can hardly fancy that it is not some celebrated fair; but I see 'tis every day the same. 'Tis certain no town can be more advantageously situated for commerce. Here are seven large canals on which the merchant ships come up to the very doors of their houses. The shops and warehouses are of a surprising neatness and magnificence, filled with an incredible

1 To Lady Mar. Frances (Pierrepont) Erskine Lady Mar (1690-1761) was Lady Mary's closest sister in age and was Lady Mary's primary source of social information. This edition follows the address format of the letter-book and the 1763 edition. Wharmcliffe and Halsband identify many of the addressees with the use of a key to the letters found in Wortley Manuscript vii.124, but Lady Mary did not present the letters with these names. We have included these names in the notes. See A Note on the Text, p. 41.

2 Lady Mary and her husband Edward Wortley left Gravesend on 2 August 1716. Lady Mary's dating is sometimes incorrect, but it gives a reasonable sense of the progress of her journey. Moreover, while Catholic countries had adopted Pope Gregory's calendar, Britain was eleven days behind the continent, as it continued until 1752 to use the Julian calendar.

LET. XXXVI.
TO MR POPE.

Belgrade Village, June 17. O. S.

I HOPE, before this time, you have received two or three of my letters. I had yours but yesterday, though dated the third of February, in which you suppose me to be dead and buried. I have already let you know, that I am still alive; but to say truth, I look upon my present circumstances to be exactly the same with those of departed spirits. The heats of Constantinople have driven me to this place, which perfectly answers the description of the Elysian fields. I am in the middle of a wood, consisting chiefly of fruit-trees, watered by a vast number of fountains, famous for the excellency of their water, and divided into many shady walks, upon short grass, that seems to me artificial, but, I am assured, is the pure work of nature—within view of the Black sea, from whence we perpetually enjoy the refreshment of cool breezes, that make us insensible of the heat of the summer. The village is only inhabited by the richest amongst the Christians, who meet every night at a fountain, forty paces from my house, to sing and dance. The beauty and dress of the women exactly resemble the ideas of the ancient nymphs, as they are given us by the representations of the poets and painters. But what persuades me more fully of my decease, is the situation of my own mind, the profound ignorance I am in, of what passes among the living (which only comes to me by chance) and the great calmness with which I receive it. Yet I have still a hankering after my friends and acquaintances left in the world, according to the authority of that admirable author,

2	LTR-001	I FLATTER, myself, dear sister, that I shall give you some pleasure in letting you know that I have safely passed the sea, though we had the ill fortune of a storm. We were persuaded by the captain of the yacht to set out in a calm, and he pretended there was nothing so	Vous apprendrez avec plaisir, sans doute, ma chere Sœur, que j'ai passé la mer sans accident, quoique nous ayons essuyé une tempête. Le Capitaine du Yacht nous fit partir dans un tems calme, croyant qu'il étoit facile de faire le trajet à la faveur de la marée ; mais deux jours étoient à peine écoulés qu'il s'éleva un vent si violent, qu'aucun matelot ne
3	LTR-002	I MAKE haste to tell you, dear Madam, that, after all the dreadful fatigues you threatened me with, I am hitherto very well pleased with my journey. We take care to make such short stages every day, that I rather fancy myself upon parties of pleasure, than upon the road; and	JE me hâte de vous apprendre, ma chere Dame, que je n'ai point encore essuyé les fatigues insupportables dont vous m'aviez menacée. Je suis, au contraire, très-satisfaite de mon voyage. Nous faisons de si petites journées, qu'il me semble plutôt être en partie de plaisir qu'en route. Bien n'est plus agréable que de voyager en Hollande ; ce Pays
4	LTR-003	I AM extremely sorry, my dear S. that your fears of disobliging your relations, and their fears for your health and safety, have hindered me from enjoying the happiness of your company, and you the pleasure of a diverting journey. I receive some degree of mortification from	JE suis bien fâchée, ma chere S. C. que l'inquiétude de vos parens sur votre santé, & votre soumission à leurs volontés, nous privent, moi, de la satisfaction d'être avec vous, & vous, de celle de faire un voyage agréable. Lorsque je rencontre quelqu'un de ces objets qui charment la vue, je suis saisie de tristesse, parce que vous êtes privée du plaisir de la
5	LTR-004	IF my lady ---- could have any notion of the fatigues that I have suffered these two last days, I am sure she would own it a great proof of regard, that I now sit down to write to her. We hired horses from Nimwegen hither, not having the conveniency (sic) of the	SI vous pouviez, Milady, vous former une idée des fatigues que j'ai essuyées depuis deux jours, vous me tiendriez compte, j'en suis persuadée, du courage que j'ai de vous écrire, & vous le prendriez comme une preuve convaincante de la parfaite considération que j'ai pour vous. Nous avons pris des chevaux de louage, parce qu'il n'y a point de Poste de Nimwege
6	LTR-005	AFTER five days travelling post, I could not sit down to write on any other occasion, than to tell my dear lady, that I have not forgot her obliging command, of sending her some account of my travels. I have already passed a large part of Germany, have seen all that is	LA fatigue que j'ai essuyée pendant cinq jours de poste, ne m'empêchera pas d'exécuter l'ordre flatteur que m'a donné ma chere Comtesse de lui rendre compte de mes voyages. J'ai traversé une grande partie de l'Allemagne, & j'ai vu tout ce qui mérite de l'attention à Cologne, à Francfort, à Wurtzbourg, enfin, à Nuremberg. Il est impossible de ne pas sentir

Let's look more closely to a shorter example:

17	LTR-016	I AM just come to Brunswick, a very old town, but which has the advantage of being the capital of the duke of Wolsenbottle's dominions, a family (not to speak of its ancient honours) illustrious, by having its younger branch on the throne of England, and having given two empresses to Germany. I have not forgot to drink your health here in mum, which I think very well deserves its reputation of being the best in the world. This letter is the third I have writ to you during my journey; and I declare to you, that if you don't send me immediately a full and true account of all the changes and chances among our London acquaintance, I will not write you any description of Hanover (where I hope to be to-night) though I know you have more curiosity to hear of that place than any other.	J'ARRIVE dans l'instant à Brunswick, ville très-ancienne, & Capitale des Etats du Duc de Wolfenbittel. Cette Maison est très-illustre : elle a l'avantage d'avoir donné deux Impératrices à l'Allemagne, & de voir aujourd'hui sa branche cadette sur le Trône d'Angleterre. J'ai bu à votre santé avec du Mum*, qui passe, à juste titre, pour être la meilleure boisson que l'on puisse trouver en ce genre. Voici la troisieme Lettre que je vous écris pendant mon voyage ; mais je vous déclare que, si vous ne me donnez incessamment un détail de toutes les aventures qui sont arrivées à nos connoissances de Londres, je ne vous enverrai aucune description de Hanovre, où je compte arriver ce soir, quoique je n'ignore pas combien cette Ville vous intéresse.
